

Types of Democracies

Parliamentary

vs

Presidential

Democracies

Democracies

Elected Representatives choose a country's leader from members of the political party with the most votes

President & Legislature are elected by the citizens of that area.

Prime Minister is the head of this form of government

President is the head of this form of government

Prime Minister is selected by Parliament

President is elected by the people

Legislature/Parliament has voting power

The legislature has power with making laws

Parliament members are elected by the citizens

Citizens vote in elections for the members of Legislature

The UK & Germany have parliamentary systems of Government

The United States, Mexico, and Brazil have presidential systems of Government